

PERSONAL INDEPENDENCE PAYMENT FACTSHEET

Introduction

The information in this factsheet is intended to be a guide to the rules for Personal Independence Payment and does not cover every circumstance. It is possible that some of the information is over simplified or may become inaccurate over time, for example because of changes to the law. The rates shown are applicable from April 2022 to March 2023 and Blesma has made every effort to ensure that the information is correct at time of publication.

1) What is Personal Independence Payment?

Personal Independence Payment is a disability benefit for people aged 16 up to state pension age who have difficulty with their daily living activities such as washing and bathing, preparing food, managing therapy and making budgeting decisions (the daily living component) or difficulty with their mobility (the mobility component).

If a successful claim for Personal Independence Payment is made before state pension age, it can continue to be paid beyond state pension age as long as you continue to meet the criteria.

If you are state pension age or over and not receiving Personal Independence Payment you may be able to claim Attendance Allowance. See Blesma's Attendance Allowance factsheet.

Entitlement to Personal Independence Payment will be based on the effect your long term health condition or disability has on your daily life, not the condition or disability itself. It is paid to recognise the increased costs an individual may face due to an illness or disability.

Personal Independence Payment is:

- non means tested (any income or capital you have will not affect the claim);
- not taxable;
- paid whether or not you are working; and
- paid at different levels depending on your difficulties

If you are already in receipt of Disability Living Allowance you will be invited to claim Personal Independence Payment at some stage, as Personal Independence Payment is gradually replacing Disability Living Allowance for people aged 16 – state pension age, even for those with an indefinite or lifetime award.

England, Scotland and Wales

Claimants living in these areas who were aged 65 or over on 8th April 2013 will be unaffected by this change and can continue to receive Disability Living Allowance as long as the criteria continues to be met.

Northern Ireland

Claimants living in Northern Ireland who were aged 65 or over on 20th June 2016 will be unaffected by this change and can continue to receive Disability Living Allowance as long as the criteria continues to be met.

2) Who can claim?

You can claim Personal Independence Payment if:

- You are aged 16 and up to state pension age when you claim and
- You pass the Personal Independence Payment assessment (see section 10) and
- You satisfy the required period condition (your difficulties must have been present for three months before your claim and expected to last a further nine months after your claim) and
- You are present in the UK and have been for so for no less than 104 weeks in the last 156 weeks i.e. two out of the last three years and
- You are habitually resident and are not subject to immigration control

Important information if you live in Scotland

Personal Independence Payment is being replaced by a new benefit, Adult Disability Payment from 2022. This is being phased in across Scotland from the following dates:

21 March – if you live in Dundee City, Perth and Kinross or the Western Isles

20 June – if you live in Angus, North Lanarkshire or South Lanarkshire

25 July – if you live in Aberdeen City, Aberdeenshire, East Ayrshire, Fife, Moray, North Ayrshire or South Ayrshire

29 August – if you live anywhere else in Scotland

If applications are not open in your area you can still claim Personal Independence Payment.

If you live in Scotland and already receive Personal Independence Payment, you will continue to receive it until Social Security Scotland contact you to move you onto Adult Disability payment. at some stage. This may happen after summer 2022.

For More information, please see our Factsheet for Adult Disability Payment

If you are already paid one of the following allowances you will not be able to receive the daily living component of Personal Independence Payment if they are paid at an equivalent or higher amount:

- Constant Attendance Allowance paid with War Pension
- Constant Attendance Allowance paid with Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

If you are already paid the following allowance you will not be able to receive the mobility component of Personal Independence Payment

- War Pension Mobility Supplement

If you are already paid the following allowance you will not be able to receive Personal Independence Payment daily living or mobility component

- Armed Forces Independence Payment paid with Armed Forces Compensation Scheme

3) How much is Personal Independence Payment?

Personal Independence Payment can be paid at one of two rates for each component, dependent on the number of points scored in the assessment.

Daily living component
Standard rate	£61.85 per week	Score 8 – 11 points
Enhanced rate	£92.40 per week	Score 12 or more points
Mobility component
Standard rate	£24.45 per week	Score 8 – 11 points
Enhanced rate	£64.50 per week	Score 12 or more points

4) How long is Personal Independence Payment awarded for?

If a decision is made to award you Personal Independence Payment, it will usually be for a fixed term. If your condition is unlikely to change, there will be a minimum review date of eighteen months. You will be sent a shortened version of the 'How your disability affects you' form, known as the AR1 form. It is important you return this form by the deadline given. If you do not, your entitlement may be ended. When the case manager receives the form, if there is enough information you will be notified of the decision. Otherwise the assessment process is similar to that of new claims.

If you have reached pension age, or have a severe, lifelong condition where your needs are expected to remain the same, or increase, and you have been awarded the enhanced rate of both the daily living and mobility components you will only be reviewed every ten years.

5) Terminal illness

If you have a terminal illness you will qualify for the enhanced rate of the daily living component. A medical practitioner will need to complete a form called a DS1500 that states that you are not expected to live beyond six months. You will automatically be considered to have passed the daily living assessment for the enhanced rate and will not have needed to meet the required period condition. To receive the mobility component, you will need to pass the mobility assessment (with the exception of meeting the required period condition).

6) What if I go into hospital?

If you spend more than 28 days in hospital then your Personal Independence Payment will be suspended. It can restart when you return home as long as you continue to meet the claim criteria. If you have more periods in hospital these can be added together if they are separated by 28 days or less.

7) Motability

Claimants entitled to the enhanced rate of mobility, that has more than a year left before review, have the option to lease a car through the Motability scheme. If you have a car through Motability, periods in hospital can affect this. You will need to contact Motability on 0300 456 4566 if your Personal Independence Payment is suspended by a stay in hospital. To find out more about Motability visit www.motability.co.uk or contact 0300 456 4566.

8) What if I go into a care home?

The daily living component is not normally payable while you are resident of a care home in which any of the costs of your accommodation, board, personal care or other services are met out of public or local funds. Payment will usually stop after you have been living in the care home for 28 days.

If you are fully funding the cost of your care home you can continue to receive the daily living component.

The mobility component is not usually affected by a stay in a care home.

9) How do I claim?

England, Scotland and Wales

For citizens claiming in these areas, to initiate your claim you will need to call the Department for Work and Pensions Personal Independence Payment claim line on:
Telephone: 0800 917 2222

Northern Ireland

For citizens of Northern Ireland, to initiate your claim for benefit you will need to call the Department for Communities Personal Independence Payment Centre on:
Telephone: 0800 012 1573

The call should take about fifteen minutes and you will be asked for some basic details such as:

- contact details and date of birth;
- National Insurance number;
- bank or building society details;
- doctor's or health worker's name;
- details of any time you have spent abroad, in a care home or hospital

Someone else can call on your behalf, but you will need to be with them when they call.

Approximately two weeks after the phone call you should receive a form 'How your disability affects you'. The purpose of this form is to ask you to explain how your disability or condition affects your day to day life and your ability to undertake a range of set activities. You may be given the option to complete an online form.

You can include extra evidence when sending the form in if you wish. This could include a medical report, a diary where you have recorded your day to day difficulties over a period of time or anything else you think would support your case. You should write your name and national insurance number on anything you send in. You may like to refer to our Personal Independence Payment Hints and Tips on completing the 'How your disability affects you' form.

You have one month from the date it was sent out to return this form. If you fail to do so without good reason, your claim will be disallowed. It is advisable to copy your form and any supporting evidence you send in so that you have your submitted information to hand should you need to challenge the decision.

10) How your claim is assessed

Decisions on Personal Independence Payment entitlement are made by the Department for Work and Pensions decision makers (referred to as case managers). However, the assessment itself is carried out by one of two provider companies depending on the area you live in; Independent Assessment Services or Capita.

Once your completed 'How your disability affects you' form has been received by the Department for Work and Pensions, together with any supporting evidence you have sent in, it is passed over to Independent Assessment Services or Capita. They will seek further evidence from the named professionals you have given on the form if they feel it is necessary. They will then consider whether there is enough information to make a decision using just this information. In the majority of cases, further information is required, and claimants are asked to take part in an assessment, where you will be assessed by a health professional. The assessment will either be by telephone, video or at an assessment centre.

If you are asked to attend an assessment centre this could be up to a 90 minute journey away. Some people may be visited in their own homes for the assessment. You can request a visit at home if one has not been offered, but you may have to provide evidence that you cannot travel. This may need to be supported by your doctor or specialist.

Limb loss will not automatically entitle you to Personal Independence Payment (unless you have bilateral lower limb loss, where you would qualify for the enhanced mobility component). It is not the disability or condition that you have, but how it impacts on your daily life that will entitle you to the benefit. Individuals react and manage differently so those with the same disability or condition will not necessarily have the same benefit entitlement.

If you have a carer, they may also attend the assessment, but they will not be able to answer questions on your behalf (unless you have difficulty with communication). They will be able to add to what you have to say, particularly with respect to their role as a carer.

The assessment tests your ability to participate in everyday life. It is a points related assessment of your physical and mental condition and of your cognitive functions based on twelve different activities.

Within each activity there are a number of descriptors. These describe your level of ability to carry out the activity and how much help you need with it. They have a sliding scale of scores that reflect your increasing inability to manage an activity and the relevant descriptor and score will be identified. See appendix A for the list of Activities and Descriptors and Appendix B for a definition of the terms used.

If you cannot reliably complete an activity then you should be considered as unable to complete it. For the purpose of the assessment reliably means undertaking an activity:

- Safely – i.e. In a manner unlikely to cause harm to you or another person
- To an acceptable standard – e.g. where someone washes themselves inadequately but does not realise they are not clean after they have finished
- Repeatedly – i.e. being able to complete the activity as often as is required
- Within a reasonable time period – i.e. it takes you no more than twice the time taken by someone with no health problems or disabilities

The assessment takes account of changes in your disability or condition to reflect the fact that you may have good or bad days. The health professional must consider your abilities over a course of a year i.e. three months before and nine months after your claim. This is referred to as the 'required period condition'.

For each activity, a suitable descriptor will be selected that reflects your ability to undertake that task. This will be considered to apply if you meet the descriptor for more than 50% of the required period.

If your condition fluctuates it may be difficult to determine which descriptor best describes your ability. For this reason, it may be beneficial to maintain a diary that records how your disability or condition affects you. You can send in a copy of the diary with your form, and this can be referred to by the health professional as part of the assessment.

If, when using the reliability test, you score more than once in a given activity you will be awarded the highest descriptor.

If your assessment is at a centre, the health professional will observe your ability to stand, sit and move around. They will be informally observing your abilities from the point that they greet you. This can include watching you bend down to pick up a handbag, how you get out of a chair and how you walk. During the assessment, they may also carry out a brief physical examination. This will be different from an examination by your GP as they are not trying to make a diagnosis, but are interested in how your ability to carry out everyday tasks is affected by your disability or condition.

The health professional will expect you to wear and make use of any prosthesis you have. In that regard, you should mention any difficulty you have with your prosthesis e.g. rubbing, pain, whether there are days or extended periods where you cannot wear it.

Following your assessment, the health professional will complete a report of their findings. The report must be clear, fully reasoned and justified. It should highlight key evidence to support the health professional's choice of the descriptors. Where possible they should include specific examples to illustrate any difficulties with undertaking an activity. If necessary, the report should provide a clear explanation why greater reliance has been given to particular sections of evidence.

11) The decision

Once the health professional has completed their report, it will be sent to the Department for Work and Pensions Case Manager who will decide whether or not to award your claim based on the report.

You will then receive a notification letter informing you of the decision to either award or disallow your claim. The notification letter will tell you which descriptors are considered to apply to you and the reasons for choosing them.

12) What if I am unhappy with the decision?

If your application is refused, or you are awarded a lower rate than you feel you should be entitled to, you can challenge the decision. It is important to note that there is a risk in doing so, as a challenge to an award may result in a reduction in the award, or potentially losing it completely.

13) How do I challenge a decision?

You can have three attempts to challenge a decision, but there is a strict process to follow. There is a one month time limit for you to register each stage of the process and you will need to follow each stage in order.

You should be notified in writing of any decisions made on your claim. The decision notice should set out your rights to challenge the decision. You can ask for written reasons for the decision if none were given in the decision notice. You must ask for these within one month of the date of the original decision notice.

Late challenges can be requested in certain circumstances. You will need to show it was not practical for you to apply in time and you should provide a clear and reasoned explanation for the delay. There is no guarantee that a late appeal will be accepted.

Mandatory reconsideration

This is the first stage of challenging the decision. Within one month of the date on the notification letter you need to register the mandatory reconsideration. If you wish you can send in some extra supporting evidence such as a letter from yourself why you disagree with the decision or evidence from a medical professional. A mandatory reconsideration will result in the Department for Work and Pensions reviewing your award 'in house'. For Northern Ireland, they are considered by the relevant Social Security Agency.

Appeal to First Tier Tribunal

If your mandatory reconsideration is unsuccessful then you have another opportunity to challenge the decision. This must be registered within one month of the date on the mandatory reconsideration revision letter. Her Majesty's Court and Tribunal Service is responsible for appeals in England, Scotland and Wales. In Northern Ireland it is the responsibility of The Appeals Service. Both are independent from either the Department for Work and Pensions or the Social Security Agency. You have the opportunity to have your case heard on paper or in person. There is a higher success rate if you attend in person. Appeals can take several months. However, if you are successful, the award is backdated to the date of your claim.

Appeal to the Upper Tribunal

If your appeal to the first tier tribunal is unsuccessful you have another opportunity to challenge the decision through Her Majesty's Court and Tribunal Service, within one month of the first tier tribunal notification of the decision. This appeal needs to be based on a point of law. As a result, these appeals can be complex, and it would be advisable to seek specialist advice.
